

Winter Haiku
By Frederick William Schroeder IV

Words etched in stone
to commemorate
a decomposing something.

Flowers, of all varieties,
serves as markers
for dead white people.

My name on a gravestone;
My fingers grow numb,
but I keep writing.

Atop a bed of dead flowers,
a wreath rises,
Evergreen.